PRESBYTERY OF N. PHILADELPHIA HAS TWO SESSIONS

Examines and Passes Robert Cunningham, of Langhorne

SESSIONS IN NEWTOWN

To Try to Persuade Members of Independent Board to Withdraw

NEWTOWN, Sept. 19.—Members of the North Philadelphia Presbytery met in Newtown yesterday for their September meetings, the first session, in the morning, occurring in the old Presbyterian Chapel in Newtown Township, and the afternoon and final meeting taking place in the new church building in this borough.

The presiding officer was the Rev. Wilson T. Beale, Oak Lane, moderator of the Presbytery, who introduced Dr. Lewis Cutler, of Calvary Church, Wynote, the latter taking charge of the devotional service. The address of welcome was given by the Rev. Jacob Avery Long, pastor of the hostess church. Routine business followed.

At 12:30 the Presbytery recessed for luncheon which was served in Fellowship Hall of the new building. At 2:15 the second meeting got under way, at which time William Tomlinson, burgess of Newtown, extended a welcome to the gathering, in this 250th anniversary year of the founding of Newtown borough.

Dr. John McDowell, former moderator of the general assembly, and secretary of the board of foreign missions, addressed the Presbytery on "The Church and Social Conditions of the Day."

During the business period which followed the examination and licensure of Robert Beach Cunningham, Langhorne, occurred. Mr. Cunningham, son of the Rev. Henry Cunningham, pastor of Langhorne Presbyterian Church, passed a most creditable examination, and later preached effectively to those assembled. The one examined is a senior in the Westminster Theological Seminary, Philadelphia.

The matter of communications of the Presbytery to two elders, the Messrs. Willis R. Roberts, Norristown, and P. K. Stamm, Narberth, was discussed, and it was decided by the Presbytery to request the moderator to appoint a committee of five to wait upon these two men, and see if by friendly means they can be persuaded to withdraw from the Independent Board of Presbyterian Foreign Missions. Further action in these cases

UNITED STATES IS LEAST PROVINCIAL, HE SAYS

GIVES CREDIT TO PRESS

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—(INS)—The United States today is the least provincial country in the world, Dr. Russell Potter, Director of the Institute of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University, declared here following his return from a tour of European capitals. Growth of American interest in international affairs he attributed largely to the press.

"American correspondents abroad are the cream of the world's crop," Dr. Potter said. "There is not a single newspaper in Europe which devotes one-third the space to foreign news that our great metropolitan dailies do."

"Furthermore, when one considers the papers in cities under 50,000 population, there is no comparison whatever. One might live week in and week out in Nuremberg, Germany, or Hastings, England, or Florence, Italy, and never know, from the local press, that America had anything but heat waves, droughts, and Dillinger."

"Nowhere in Europe is the interest in affairs of the world so lively as in the United States. Nowhere does one find such organizations as the Foreign Policy Association, the Institute of Arts and Sciences, and the thousands of small local forums and discussion groups."

"Perhaps the most interesting and hopeful thing to be noted abroad is a growing conviction that the current wave of nationalism must be stopped. This conviction is held, for the most part, by younger men and recently formed political and social groups of younger men; but eventually recognition of its justness will come, and the sooner it comes the better for world affairs and national affairs."

"Thus in London I heard one of the younger members of Parliament, speaking on the floor of the House of Commons against the proposed Shipping Subsidy Bill, declare that England must recognize and admit to the world that before the war she had gained more than her share of the world's shipping and must offer, voluntarily, to make new adjustments, not to recapture that lion's share, but to join with other nations in adjusting to all a fair share."

"And one of the cardinal points in the Plan recently proposed in France by a representative group led by Jules Romains, 'The Group of the Ninth of July,' is the frank admission that France cannot satisfactorily adjust her internal economic program until some sensible adjustment is reached in the world problem."

"Just now permanent peace seems far away. Europe is a land of hates and fears. France fears Germany. Italy fears France. Germany hates and fears France and Yugoslavia, and distrusts Italy. England fears and distrusts them all; and they all distrust England. This is the psychology of madness; this is the state of mind that leads to war. The League of Nations' dream seems now more remote than ever, and Briand's 'United States of Europe' seems like something out of the Crusades."

BRISTOL'S HARD LUCK

Editor, Courier:

During the past few years, Bristol has suffered more from unfavorable economic conditions, perhaps, than any other town in eastern Pennsylvania. The closing of the airplane factory threw many persons out of employment. Inadequate tariff protection accorded the leather industry, resulted in the shutting down of the Bristol Patent Leather Company's plant, with the consequent loss of employment for several hundred men; combined with these two calamities, the utter breakdown of the trolley system and the slowing down of employment in other transportation systems, added more to the hard luck already experienced.

For over sixty-five years, the town of Bristol has been dependent upon its manufacturing industries. When they have enjoyed a season of activity the whole town has participated therein. Workmen because of steady employment have been able to buy their homes and not only the necessities but many of the luxuries of life. The merchants of the town have prospered because the local industries have given work to their customers. Taxes paid by the industries, directly and indirectly, have been the largest single factor in paying the operating expenses of the Borough, maintaining our public school system, and aiding in the acquisition of those utilities which contribute to the health and safety of the citizens. For years before the depression set in, Bristol was a prosperous manufacturing town, with its citizens enjoying the happiness and contentment, which come as a result of a steady income, made possible through the operation of its industries.

During the depression, the leaders of our local industries have contributed their share, to relieve the distress prevalent within the town. The factories have often been run, when it was not necessary, just to provide an income for the employees. When the codes for the regulation of industry were adopted, the mills in Bristol, immediately adjusted the hours of labor, and the scale of wages, to conform thereto. When sufficient business was not obtainable and the mills were compelled to curtail production, the work was divided so that all the employees could find employment for a part of the time. Peace and harmony prevailed. There was no strife between employer and employees, and there was a feeling prevalent throughout the town, that the manufacturers were doing more than their share, to relieve the distress and to prevent the breakdown of the life of the community.

In spite of these conditions and without justifiable excuse, early last week the local manufacturers and their employees were subjected to a most dastardly and despicable experience, and the town of Bristol was administered a crushing blow, the results of which will be seen in the poverty, distress and suffering, which will surely follow. Several loads of agitators from outside of Bristol, suddenly swept into town, and by threatening and intimidating the workmen, caused the shut-down of our textile industries.

The entrance of these agitators into the town, their efforts to intimidate and coerce the employees, was nothing short of crime. If the laws of our land can be so easily broken, and the State and Federal governments remain passive, and refuse through fear or political trickery, to give adequate protection to our citizens and our industrial institutions, then confidence in our government is gone.

The situation in Bristol is one which deeply concerns every citizen. The welfare of the community is dependent upon the operation of our textile industries. Lawlessness, intimidation and coercion, have brought hard luck to a peaceful industrious community. Had any trouble existed in the industries, it was within the rights of the employees to settle their differences with their employers, without any interference from outside sources. The fact that no differences existed increases the magnitude of the crime which was committed by these roving agitators.

The knowledge that the employees had no grievances, the injection of agitators from outside the Borough, their intimidation of workmen, and the threats of bodily injury should they remain at work, the curtailment of income on the part of the employees, with the resultant loss to the merchants of the town, and the further weakening of our tax reservoir, should fill all good citizens with the deepest concern.

Burgess.

LATEST NEWS Received by International News Service Leased Wires.

ROWE KIDNAP SCARE

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 19.—Police of Detroit and Pontiac were anxious and puzzled today over what may be a plot to kidnap Lynwood "Schoolboy" Rowe, ace pitcher of the Detroit Tigers, or his pretty sweetheart, Edna Skinner. Police of both cities frankly expressed their doubt, but quietly lay plans to guard the Tigers team against any snatch attempts.

The scare originated in the story of Mrs. Viola Talbot, 27, of Detroit, who came to Pontiac police headquarters sobbing and hysterical. She said she had been kidnapped in Detroit. Mrs. Talbot said she had been held prisoner blindfolded, for several hours somewhere near Pontiac, and then released. During the time Mrs. Talbot was held captive, she said her abductors continually talked of "the Row" and how much money could be made out of Rowe.

Mrs. Talbot said she was waiting for the traffic light to change in downtown Detroit yesterday afternoon when a well-dressed man approached and stood beside her.

"Just as the light changed," she said, "a big car stood in front of us and a man swung out of the front seat, pointed a gun at the man standing beside me and ordered him to get into the car. Then a woman stuck her head out of the rear window and said 'get that girl—she's seen too much of the inside.' The man with the gun then ordered me into the car."

Mrs. Talbot then related how the woman blindfolded her with a scarf while the man with the gun began to talk. He accused the man who had stood beside me of "getting cold feet in that stick-up," she said. "The other one then replied, 'never mind the stick-up—we're going after Rowe, I've got it all planned.'"

MAY REMAKE COMMISSION

Harrisburg, Sept. 19.—Four months before he retires from office, Governor Pinchot today appeared certain of complete victory in his 12-year battle to remake the Public Service Commission. All five of the executive's long ignored appointments to the Commission were slated to be confirmed by the Senate tonight, in the closing hours of the special relief session which is expected to adjourn sine die about midnight.

They will be the first Pinchot nominations to the Rate Board to receive the Republican organization okay during this administration. In return for the Senate action Governor Pinchot is expected to announce his support for the Republican ticket, perhaps even taking the stump to muster out votes in behalf of his candidates.

Negotiations which have progressed all week and which yesterday reduced to secondary importance interest in the assured enactment of the $20,000,000 Pinchot organization taxless relief financing program, culminated early today with the following statement from M. Harvey Taylor, Republican state chairman.

"I am recommending to the members of the State Senate that they confirm the present Public Service Commission. We are working for complete harmony in the Republican party." The statement was considered tantamount to confirmation for the five Pinchot appointees at tonight's session and it carried with it support of the theory that the executive will turn in for the G. O. P. party.

SOVIET FORCES IN MANCHUKUO

The Soviet troops immediately began erection of extensive fortification to hold the seized land, it was reported in the statement.

SUSPENDS SENTENCE ON BLIND MAN HERE FOR HAVING LIQUOR

Mrs. Stella Lelinski Tells The Court Her Husband Cried Too Much Over Barn Fire

IS PUT ON PROBATION

Andalusia Park Case Again in Court and Men Are Given Warning

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 19.—Changing his plea after the trial was underway from not guilty to guilty, John Lelinski, of Bristol, pleaded guilty to a charge of unlawful possession of liquor before Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

Mrs. Stella Lelinski, mother of 5 children, the oldest of which is 14 years, testified that the defendant, is her husband, and she and the children are receiving food orders.

The defendant, according to his wife, is blind and unable to earn a living or support his family.

Judge Boyer suspended sentence and placed him on probation for two years. He also directed the county pay the costs of prosecution.

County Detective Anthony Russo was appointed probation officer.

The defendant did not testify during the trial.

Lelinski was formerly a leather worker and suffered blindness because of "too much crying when his barn was destroyed by fire a few years ago," his wife said.

Joseph Kent, of Croydon, pleaded guilty before Judge Keller to a charge of the unlawful possession of liquor at his home when it was raided by agents of the Liquor Control Board in July.

The Court suspended the sentence provided by law and directed Kent to pay to the county of Bucks the sum of $100.

"Well, I have no money, so I'll have to go down the lane and crack stone to work it out," Kent remarked to the Court.

St. Valentine's Park, at Andalusia, broke into the news again when three defendants pleaded guilty to a charge of unlawful possession and sale of liquor at the park when it was raided by State agents.

The defendants are Mitchell Lech, Marion Gryzwynska and Mrs. Anna Kapusta, of Richmond. The woman was the cashier who sold tickets for beer and sandwiches sold at the park. The two men were the bartenders. The picnic that day was given by the Queen Hedrick Society, a charitable organization, whose proceeds go entirely to help the poor.

Judge Keller suspended sentence in each case on condition that they pay the costs.

"I want to warn you, however," the Court remarked, "you cannot sell liquor or beer at St. Valentine's Park without a license, no matter what subterfuge may be used."

Because liquor the State Liquor Stores sold left an ugly taste in his mouth, the morning after, a fifty-eight-year-old Havercock township resident, William Sherwood, charged with the unlawful possession of liquor, said he decided to experiment with the whiskey by filtering it through charcoal in a funnel until he found a concoction that met with his taste.

Sherwood, who was convicted on a liquor charge in the local courts several years ago, was not able to convince a jury on Monday afternoon that he was merely straining liquor through a charcoal funnel, with a sponge in the bottom when his farm near Applebachville was raided by two enforcement officers of the Liquor Board on August 29.

The officers, accompanied by Constable Albert R. Atkinson, all testified they found hundreds of bottles—among them they counted one Sweepstakes container—in the defendant's house, and five quarts of whiskey in a crock. Two fifty-gallon drums of kerosene were also discovered, and in addition, two barrels of mash.

The defendant, a lean and talkative individual, taking the stand in his own defense, amused the authorities of the Court and spectators when he explained that he made vinegar out of cornmeal because of a scarcity of apples in the neighborhood.

He insisted that he was only "clarifying" whiskey bought at the Perkasie state liquor store when his home was raided.

He admitted upon examination by District Attorney Eastburn that the method he used to clarify the liquor was also the method used in making moonshine.

When the Court asked the defendant to produce as evidence the receipts for the alleged purchases of liquor at the State liquor store, he dismissed the inquiry by saying that he did not make the purchase, but that friends bought the liquor for him.

Judge Calvin S. Boyer, who sentenced him to pay the costs of prosecution and a fine of $300, said before pronouncing sentence: "It is a violation of the law to take liquors out of their bottles, sealed by the State, and put them into another vessel except for immediate use. Continued on Page 4

FIX THE BLAME

There are many circumstances in connection with the Morro Castle tragedy that are in need of close examination by investigating authorities.

The cause of the fire that took more than 100 lives still apparently is undetermined. First reports were that the fire was caused by lightning. But statements by survivors have served to cast doubt on this point.

No less confusion exists with respect to happenings that followed discovery of the blaze. This has been increased by conflicting statements of survivors and the efforts of officials of the operating line to prevent members of the crew from talking.

One of the most important questions growing out of the tragedy is why nearly an hour elapsed after the fire broke out before an SOS was sent out. Even then, it appears, the call was flashed on the initiative of the wireless operator instead of on the orders of the captain.

The fact that the burning ship was only about 10 miles off shore and that many other vessels were in the vicinity make it reasonable to believe that had the call for help been sent as soon as the fire was discovered there might have been no loss of life, or that the number of dead at least would have been greatly reduced.

Nearly all accounts of the disaster indicate that confusion reigned among officers and crew. What lives were saved apparently was due, in a large measure, to chance rather than to resourcefulness and the calm performance of duty by those upon whom rested responsibility for the safety of the passengers.

The belief seems inescapable that somebody was to blame for the large loss of life; that incompetence or negligence played a big part in the tragedy.

It is the duty of the investigators to place this blame.

UNRESPONSIVE

It would be interesting to know how the new Federal law requiring the registering of machine guns and other weapons of the kind used largely by gangsters is operating.

Kansas City would not be expected to have as many of these weapons within its confines as might be found in Chicago, for instance, or even New York. The Missouri city, nevertheless, is not entirely free of gangs and gangsterism. It has been known to harbor dangerous and bloodthirsty characters of this kind, and it has an underworld, where such probably still are to be found.

But so far, no gangster has brought his machine gun to the collector of internal revenue to be registered.

"CAROLINE" by RUTH DEWEY GROVES

CHAPTER XXXVI

The Lady Slipper was a small white inn under towering oaks. Evergreens planted close to the slatboard walls gave it a snug appearance. From the wide brick chimney a cloud of smoke poured into the clear crisp air. Caroline loved the place. They would have a table before the roaring fire—if the little old grandmother in the gray and lavender dress wasn't knitting there, with the big white cat curled up beside her slippers feet.

As it chanced the room was empty and they settled themselves before the fire with a great deal of appreciation. The low rocker with the crocheted tily was pushed into a corner. It was the grandmother's chair. When Caroline saw it there she said, "I wonder how Granny is?"

She inquired of the woman who came to serve them. Granny, she was told, was in bed with a cold. Caroline was very sorry to hear it. Her marked interest in the old lady puzzled Howard. They had been there together only once before, yet Caroline had spoken as though she knew the grandmother well.

With her soup came a message that Granny would be pleased if the young lady would just step in and visit with her for a minute.

Caroline went at once. When she returned there was a slightly startled expression in her eyes.

"Very foolish to go near any one with a cold," Howard remarked crossly. Caroline did not answer. She was thinking of something. Granny had said, "Granny had remembered—and she had forgotten—that it was with Malcolm she had been here on several occasions—it was only a short distance from the university—to eat a dish of home-made ice cream. And Granny had sent her regards to Caroline's nice young man."

Caroline looked at her present nice young man and tried not to admit even to herself that she had enjoyed those hours with Malcolm more than she'd realized.

"I sent the soup back to the kitchen," Howard added, pushing in her chair. "I'd like a drink. It's been a hectic morning." He ended on a note of reproach.

"All right," Caroline said quickly. "It has been a strain. I'd like one too. And then let's plan where we'll go on our honeymoon!"

Howard stared at her. She had spoken excitedly, almost, he thought, defiantly.

"I don't understand why you're making so much fuss over this grandmother person," Howard declared, pushing a glass across the table to Caroline.

His crossness annoyed her. He had owned so much of her life—perhaps it would be good for him to know that she could spare a thought for someone else.

"It isn't just Granny," she replied quietly. "she talked about times when I'd been here before, with Malcolm Stuart."

Howard frowned. "I should think you'd want to forget about that," he retorted.

Caroline's clear gaze held his eyes unwaveringly. "I do," she said slowly.

"An Edge Street impulse, my dear. People who have no restraint never have anything else," Howard asserted calmly. "As witness the young man who inspired your feeling."

Caroline experienced a distaste for discussing Malcolm with Howard. They were worlds apart—and she had cast her lot with Howard. Better to forget about Malcolm and his crazy outlook. She sighed and lifted her glass.

"We'll have to hurry along," Howard said when they had finished the soup. He beckoned across the room to the waitress. "Bring us something already prepared. We're in a hurry." Then, to Caroline, he added, "You don't mind, do you?"

"I think I'll have some gingerbread and coffee," she told the woman. "You ought to try it, Howard. It's Granny's recipe."

"Roast lamb, a cherry tart and coffee," Howard read from the handwritten menu. "That's all, thanks."

They did not enjoy themselves again until they were once more in the car and speeding along the highway to the side road that led to the lake. Gradually Howard's ill humor vanished and he drew Caroline along with him to a brighter mood.

The lake was a few miles to the lake were rough and delayed a putting hour, but they were driving through country that was beautiful even during the commonly dreary interlude between the glory of autumn and the snows of winter. Caroline thrilled to it.

The lake was high in the hills. They climbed along a narrow road, paralleled with the waterway of a rocky stream, coming upon frequent deep, boulder-bordered pools, where Howard told her they'd find excellent trout fishing in the spring.

"And back of the cottage there's a little brook that comes right down to the door," he went on enthusiastically, for he too was a nature lover. "Runs through a crab-apple orchard. There's an acre of old trees and a big field where we can have a driving test and a putting green. I'm keen about it, Caro."

"It sounds heavenly," she granted, thinking in comparison of the crowded houses in South Town, the noise and dust and deadly drabness.

"We can put in casement windows," Howard enlarged, "and have a bay in the dining room. On the east side, too, with a gnarled old apple tree fairly poking through it. Oh honey, it will be great having breakfast there with you!"

"It's like climbing up a rainbow," Caroline said softly, "just to think of it."

"And here's the top, and there it is!" Howard exclaimed a few minutes later. "What do you think of it?"

"It's perfect," Caroline cried, "and to think I've lived so near it all my life and never saw it before!"

"It's not in our crowd's hunting ground," he reminded her. "I'm glad we've escaped. I'm sick of parties and jazz and wild mobs howling all over the house. But of course you didn't go through anything quite like that. Do you honestly think you'll like it up here, Caro?"

"I love it already! Let me look around before me go in."

She saw everything she looked at with an artist's appreciation. The house, with the door hanging loose, the windows broken and a corner of the roof gone, became in a flash a gem of a cottage, with soft gray stone brightened with a riot of flowers and gay curtains at shuttered windows. The uneven ground, covered thickly with dry weeds, bared a smooth lawn down to the water's edge. The strewn rocks and stones would be gathered for walks and walls. The old caved-in barn would come down to make way for a garage to be in part an exact replica of the house. Caroline pictured it all as an exquisite accomplishment, outlining her ideas to Howard in an enthusiastic run of words.

"I knew you'd see its possibilities," he declared, greatly pleased. "This back to the land movement is not so bad."

"Let's go in," Caroline exclaimed. "How I'll love doing over the house!"

Howard was charmingly responsive to every suggestion she made. She lost, in the pleasure of planning their future home, every last shred of her mistrust of herself, of her love.

It was late in the afternoon when they stood again in the doorway, looking down to the lake, straight into the sunset. Howard put an arm around her, tipped her face upward for a kiss. The old happiness came back to Caroline as his lips pressed yearningly on hers. It was sweet to feel that he loved her so much. They were closer here than they'd ever been before—the house was like a haven. She put up her arms and clung to him. It was here they would find joy, and contentment. This would be their world—it was their world. Everything else—all others—faded away from it. There were no barriers. They had been fashioned for this, for their long delayed union. Nothing remained of convention and custom. Only emotion. To Caroline, Howard's arms were security—the ecstasy of the moment a final service for their unity, the fulfillment of their love.

Her hand crept to his cheeks, pressed on them, relaxed, Howard's face against her throat. "My darling," he whispered. "I love you so."

His voice was throbbing, grateful. He lifted her from the ground, held her across his breast. Her head rested limply on his shoulder.

He turned. The sun struck on Caroline's hair, touching it with flame. Howard bent his lips to it. He took a step forward. His weight fell on a loosened floor board. There was a short splintering sound as the wood gave way. The next instant he crashed against an old rotting bench that had been left just inside the door.

Caroline fell free of it, but Howard was struck in the side. For a moment he was white with pain but after a while, when he no longer hurt him to move, and he told Caroline that he was not injured, she began to laugh.

Her laughter was hysterical, wild. Howard agreed that the accident was amusing, but not as funny as she seemed to think it. As she kept on laughing he became annoyed.

Their beautiful home planning ended in a quarrel. Howard was soon sorry, but the spell of the hour had been broken for Caroline. Howard made violent love to her before giving in to her wish to start for home, but even this was like a farcical touch to her—his very vehemence becoming a commonplace of nature. It seemed to draw a fine line between the sanctified and the sordid. One could not, she saw, have a splendid lover without the spontaneity of another. Howard's kisses were distasteful to her now. He saw this, at last, and desisted, fell into a sullen silence.

He was still angry when they reached her home. It was past the dinner hour, and Caroline would have asked him to share an ice-box supper but he said, at the door: "I'll be getting along, dear. Mother's entertaining a few bridge friends and I promised I wouldn't fail her."

They said goodnight, with nothing warmer than a cool peck of unyielding lips to soften their feelings. Howard did not go home, where, he surmised, he might find one or both of his parents, or possibly Gwendolyn, awaiting him for a discussion of his marital troubles. He played contract at his favorite club until midnight, and arrived at his cottage just a half hour after Mr. Hoffmann had left it.

On and on and on. And at last, would he see Howard and get him to be nice about it? And please send her some money.

Mr. Hoffmann saw Howard, and that young man's spirits were sufficiently depressed to convince him that Howard felt keenly his wife's desertion of him.

Mr. Hoffmann wanted him to start for Reno at once and bring Gwendolyn home, but Howard finally persuaded him to the belief that if Gwendolyn were making a mistake it was better to allow her to realize it by herself.

"You know how it is," Howard insisted. "If you coax them back they'll run away again. I know a chap whose wife takes her vacations that way. And Gwendolyn's been threatening to go for a long time. It may be just a thrill she's looking for. Let her alone—if she decides to."

CHAPTER XXXVII

Gwendolyn's father was dissatisfied with the report that his daughter had gone on a shopping trip to New York. She wouldn't have done that, he knew, without asking him for money. He had not yet told Mr. Hoffmann that Gwendolyn was gone, but he spoke of it when he got home, showing plainly that he was worried.

Mrs. Hoffmann was a placid woman, and used to being left out of her daughter's confidence, but she was devoted to her husband and when he was worried she was unhappy.

"Now don't you go getting upset about Gwendolyn," she said comfortingly. "Gwendolyn's gone shopping all right. And she didn't ask you for money. Herman, because I gave her what I was going to spend on her Christmas present."

Mr. Hoffmann's anxiety gave way to crossness. "It's not right for her to go out of town without saying a word to you," he declared, for he was ever a little resentful of his daughter's neglect of her mother.

"I'm going to have a talk with that young lady when she gets back," he growled now. "Herman, she's a grown woman and married. We can't boss her like she was a child."

Mr. Hoffmann clamped his lips together and said nothing more but he was thinking that what he wanted to do to Gwendolyn was to treat her like a child and administer a good old-fashioned spanking. As Howard had said, he was aware of her predilection for wild company.

Two days later he received a letter from her, written en route to Reno. It was a long plea for forgiveness and sympathy. She had, she said, been very unhappy with Howard. Not that he was mean to her or anything, but they just didn't understand each other and couldn't get along. They'd both tried, for the sake of their parents, but it was too miserable to be endured any longer. They weren't making anyone happy, not even themselves. She knew they'd caused everyone a lot of worry, and what was the sense of it? It would be so much nicer to be back with her folks—her own darling Mama and Papa. And divorce wasn't a disgrace any more—every one did it. But it was a terrible thing to have to go through it all alone so far away. And wouldn't he write her a nice long letter and make her feel better? She needed some money, too. Darling Mama had given her some but it wasn't enough unless she went without lunches and sodas—and if you drank sodas you didn't want those nasty old drinks people were always offering you—and wasn't it awful to be all by yourself on a train trying to write such sad news to the dear old Papa you loved so much? Only it wasn't sad news after you got used to it because it was going to bring so much happiness to all of them. And maybe Howard would see what a sad thing it was to lose a wife and he'd be a better man for it. And she'd be a better woman too, because it made you better to have such sad trouble.

On and on and on. And at last, would he see Howard and get him to be nice about it? And please send her some money.

Mr. Hoffmann saw Howard, and that young man's spirits were sufficiently depressed to convince him that Howard felt keenly his wife's desertion of him.

"You had no right to make over the whiskey you bought—neither the Court nor the jury believed your ingenious story—by putting it through another process."

Judge Royer warned the defendant that if he made his third appearance in court on a similar charge he would be sentenced to pay a fine and undergo imprisonment.

The defendant, who explained to the Court he didn't have $9 to his name, and was unable to raise the needed sum for the fine, will serve six months in the County Prison in lieu of a fine.

Maurice D. Simpson, Langhorne Negro, was acquitted on Monday afternoon when a jury returned a verdict of not guilty on a charge of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. He was directed by the Court, however, to pay the costs of prosecution, a provision made by the jury.

The Negro, who is on probation now, was convicted on another charge in court here a short time ago.

His wife, Maude Simpson, testified that her husband was not drunk when he came home, but that when the officer arrived at his home he had taken a few drinks.

Judge Keller sentenced Norman Hafler, of Pipersville, to pay a fine of $200 and costs after the defendant had pleaded guilty to a charge of driving while drunk.

Hafler told the Court he had visited a tap room on the Easton highway, near Plumsteadville, before driving his car.

Willoughby Kramer, of Perkasio, was sentenced to serve 30 days in the Bucks County Prison by Judge Keller on a charge of driving his automobile while drunk in Silverdale. Kramer's car struck a pole.

Woman Fined $150 For Selling Liquor

charges of unlawful possession and sale of liquor. She had no license to sell either beer or liquor when the enforcement agents of the State and Constable A. R. Atkinson, of Doylestown, raided her place in July and found several cases of beer and a small quantity of untaxed whiskey in her house.

In a small outbuilding adjoining the Schwartz premises, Constable Atkinson discovered several gallons of untaxed whiskey. The defendant testified that she had nothing to do with that whiskey; that it did not belong to her.

"Your place has had a very bad reputation," Judge Keller said to the Schwartz woman in pronouncing sentence. "I do not believe your story that you tell on the witness stand. You had better watch your step in the future. I am suspending prison sentence and placing you on probation and if you are caught violating the law again and brought into this Court I will sentence you on this charge."

The trial of Linford Foulke, Quakertown, a former Mennonite clergyman, charged with attempting to set fire to a barn, a parcel of a dwelling house, attempting to burn a barn, a parcel of a dwelling house, and false pretense, is scheduled for next Monday, Sept. 24. The trial of Anna Herbelin, of Perkasio, and Myer Carp, of Lansdale, charged with abortion followed by death, is also scheduled for Monday.

Sears-Roebuck Spent Big Sum in Newspaper Ads.

More money was spent for newspaper advertising last year by Sears-Roebuck and Company than in any previous year in the company's history, it was learned today from a report received by D. Minard Shaw, Sales Manager for Sears in Philadelphia from G. W. Cunningham, General Advertising Manager of the company.

The report, compiled for officials meeting to lay last-minute plans for the celebration of Sears' 48th Anniversary, September 29-30, showed that the merchandising firm spent $7,382,346 in 1933 with 830 newspapers located in the 43 states in which the company's 400 retail stores are in operation.

It revealed an expenditure of more than $1,200,000 for space bought in Philadelphia and Camden newspapers in the past four years and an increase of 14.8 per cent. over the total amount spent for newspaper advertising in 1932 throughout the country.

was deferred until the November meeting.

A call was presented by the Market Square Church, Germantown, for the pastoral services of Ellsworth Jackson. Action was postponed pending further examination of Mr. Jackson by the examining committee. This matter will be brought up at the November meeting of the Presbytery in the First Church of Olney on Tuesday, November 13th.

NOTHING LEARNED FROM HULK

Asbury Park, N. J., Sept. 18.—If ever the real story of what caused the Merro Castle fire which took 132 lives, is told, it will have to be told by the survivors. The wrecked hulk of the $5,500,000 luxury liner will never tell. Admitting this, Dickerson M. Hoover, chairman of the United States Department of Commerce inquiry into the disaster today was to resume his questioning of witnesses in New York.

Accompanied by four other officials, Hoover yesterday boarded the rust-red hulk of the vessel, beached half a stone's throw off the boardwalk here to see for himself where the fire started and what caused it. Weary and covered with rust, Hoover came off after four hours on the boat. He said: "The entire interior of the ship is a shambles. It is all burned, the library, cargo holds, the bridge, the records—everything. We cannot tell where the fire started or how, all we could tell was the fire burned with terrible intensity throughout the ship. We got a better picture of the entire situation, however, and found evidence to support several leads which have been given us. We shall recall acting Captain Warrms and other witnesses for questioning."

RESUMES SITTING PROTEST

Camden, N. J., Sept. 19.—Refreshed by a four-hour slumber, the stubborn Mrs. Elsie Barnabel, mother of six children, resumed her strange sitting protest this morning. Her feet dangling over the edge of a hole 10 feet deep, the woman sat on the sidewalk in front of her home, glaring defiantly at workmen of the New Jersey Public Service Corporation who stood by waiting for a break in the vigil. The workmen were on the scene for the purpose of planting a new electric pole in the hole over which the woman's feet hang, but Mrs. Barnabel stubbornly refused to budge from the spot she has occupied since one o'clock Monday afternoon except for the four-hour respite she took early today.

gestive of future military triumphs, are prominently displayed in the shops of Hamburg, Berlin, Leipzig, Nuremberg, Munich, and other German cities, according to Dr. Potter.

"It is all very exciting to the youngsters who stand with their noses pressed against the window, and there is always a crowd of them. It is obvious to even the youngest observer of this scene that the German forces are coming off victorious in this toy-shop battle. It is obvious to the thoughtful observer that this sort of thing, while it may not be of great importance in itself, is not leading any one very rapidly along the road to world peace. And the fact that such toy soldiers are very popular now in Germany may be a straw that indicates the direction of the wind."

COUNTESS IS VERY ATTRACTIVE IN GOWN OF GEORGETTE CREPE

By Nadia De Beaud

(U. S. Fashion Correspondent)

PARIS (INS) — The race track of Vichy, within short walking distance from the town, is one of those to which the best horses are sent, for the prizes offered are important. The stand is small, but on the day of the Grand Prix, it attracted as cosmopolitan a crowd as do the races near Paris. The smell of the freshly cut grass, the women in their long dresses of sheer materials with big, shady hats, made the whole look like a brilliantly flowered garden.

Among those taking the cure this season were the Count and Countess de Chambrun, the former Chas Longworth, and both follow all the social and sport activities of Vichy with ardor. The Countess de Chambrun wore one afternoon a simple grey and black printed georgette dress with long sleeves and a bertha to give the bodice fluffiness. A large brimmed black straw hat with a ribbon bow finished off the ensemble.

PLANT A BED OF HYACINTHS THIS FALL

Hyacinths are the most neglected bulb in the garden of all the wealth of spring blooming bulbs and one of the showiest and most satisfactory. They are perfectly hardy and long lived in the open ground, but because of their common use as house or greenhouse plants, a widespread belief that they are not hardy prevails.

They are perfectly hardy and grow as easily as tulips or daffodils outdoors.

By their stiff and formal heavy spikes of bloom, they are ideally fitted for formal beds, as they grow remarkably even in stature and size from newly planted bulbs. After their first year of bloom they take on a different character outdoors and produce smaller and more numerous spikes of much more grace and fewer flowers to a spike. The reason for this is that they are assuming their natural habit.

They do not make such huge blooms after the first year, but are big enough to satisfy anybody. The Holland bulb growers raise their bulbs for sale and to develop the largest possible flower production. Buds of tulips and hyacinths are pinched out as soon as they appear, so that the whole strength of the plant may be thrown into the bulb. In this manner the bulb when imported produces its maximum bloom. The hyacinth in its looser spikes is much more graceful than in its heavy formal form, but is not so formal. The smaller spikes of old planted bulbs are beautiful material for cutting, for which purpose the heavy formal spikes are not at all adapted.

The hyacinth requires the same soil conditions as the tulip. It should be planted six inches deep from the shoulder of the bulb and not closer than six inches apart in the bed. Eight or ten inches is better. Hyacinths need a mulch of some light material, as they come through the soil very early in the spring and if unprotected the opening blunt-nosed spike sometimes catches rain and a sudden freeze may damage the spike. A light mulch which can be readily removed and replaced obviates any such difficulty. Hyacinths should not be given any manure in the soil. They ripen their foliage much earlier than either tulips or daffodils, and therefore are more conveniently handled garden subjects, as annuals may be planted over the beds or the bulbs may be dug in time to use the beds in regular garden operations. The named varieties will give fine bloom outdoors, but unnamed varieties purchased either to color or in mixtures are the best for bedding. Catalogues list the bedding grade, which is more practical than the named types.

GREELEY, Colo. — (INS) — The drouth, which wrecked havoc with field crops in this region during the past season, apparently had little effect on the growth of turnips. B. F. Symmonds, living northwest of Greeley, is exhibiting some gigantic specimens, the largest as big as a bowling ball and weighing seven pounds, 12 ounces. It was three feet in circumference.

CONCORD, Mass. — (INS) — A precedent in Massachusetts court history is believed to have been set with the request of Suzanne Wood Blanchard, 8, through counsel, that her middle name of Wood be changed to Wells so that she might better remember her "daddy," the late Wells Blanchard, Boston lumber magnate.

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By ANN PAGE

AFTER holidays and feasting, simple foods taste best. A wide variety of vegetables are available at low prices—chief among them being carrots, beets, cabbage, turnips, onions, potatoes, corn, squash, eggplant, green, wax and shell beans, tomatoes and cucumbers. Pot roasts and stews with plenty of vegetables are satisfying and inexpensive.

Fruits or fruit, cheese and crackers make the best desserts. Half a dozen different varieties of grapes are in market at moderate prices. Bartlett pears and plums or fresh prunes, together with grapes and bananas, make an attractive, inexpensive fruit bowl for dessert service. Cantaloupes and honeydews offer good values as well. From a list of foods available at moderate prices, the following menus have been made up:

FIREMEN BOWLERS SPLIT POINTS WITH OPPONENTS

The Bristol Bowling Club and No. 1 Fire Co. of the Bristol League split the points, two apiece, in their match last night, No. 1 Fire Co. winning two games but couldn't overcome the 98 pin lead the B. B. C. piled up in the first game.

The last match was close and the two points were undecided until the end of the last frame. Samuel Deltrich, of the B. B. C., was the best pinner for that club, totaling 584, while Dixon of No. 1 was the top man for the Bristol League with 595.

In the National League the Harriman Club took all four points from the Bristol Diner with one-sided scores. The Harriman team had line team scores with Korkel having an individual total of 657 and the high single with 244.

The Diners under the avalanche of heavy opposition couldn't seem to hold up and didn't show the form they did last week.

The American League welcomed a new club of bowlers from Edgely and it is the first year they have played in league competition. They started off with their right foot first and Bowman with an even 200 won the first game. The Madisons reversed the tables in the next two games and won the other three points.

FALLS GRID TEAM IS DRILLING FOR SEASON

FALLSINGTON, Sept. 19.—About 55 boys, ranging in size from the husky Tom Langhin, all-regional quarter-back, down to the 80-pound Art Nolan, are engaging in daily football drills at Falls Township High School.

Coach Doheny has arranged the toughest schedule yet attempted by a Falls Township gridiron squad, including such teams as Haboro High School and Trenton Cathedral.

The banner game for Falls, however, is the Morrisville ray, scheduled for October 19 at Island Park. There is great rivalry between the two schools which are so closely situated, and a thrilling game usually results.

All but one of Doheny's regulars from last year have returned. Jad-locki, White, Joe Sessa, regional guard of last year; Johnson, the Cappello twins, Ed Nevins, Duono, Shull, Lovett and Captain Laughlin. Doug MacNeil, another of Doheny's proteges, is waging a valiant fight for vacant back-field post created by George Roberts' decision to forego the game this year.

A junior varsity schedule has also been arranged by Doheny.

The remaining candidates are as follows: Buckley, Rappo, Linewicz, G. Vandegrift, Appenzeller, Cryer, Steele, D. Nolan, Smith, Hewitt, L. Robbins, James Castrogiovanni, S. Snipes, Wasilvka, Pilla, L. Sessa, Titus, D. Salvo, Batten, Ashton, Dunn, Ivins, Robinson, Cook, Bohonko, Veisz, Patterson, Huber, DiRosa, G. Lovett, Pape, Wilson, McCue, Joe Castrogiovanni, B. Snipes, Whitlock, Gerhart, S. Vandegrift, Dragoni, LaRue, Lech and A. Nolan.

The varsity schedule: October 12 Nockamixon, away; October 26, Morrisville, away; October 26, Bensalem, home; November 3, Haboro, home; November 9, Langhorne, away; November 16, Pemberton, away; November 23, Cathedral, home; November 29, Immaculate, home.

CORDISCO BIRTH

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Cordisco, 324 Jefferson avenue, are rejoicing over the birth of a daughter last week.

ENDEAVOUR WINS SECOND RACE FROM RAINBOW

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 19.—Giving a highly successful demonstration of the fact that nautical lightning at least can strike twice in the same place, the British bolt of royal blue flashed brilliantly in triumph again yesterday on the high seas and dealt a dazzling blow to the defense of the America's Cup.

Thomas Sopwith's blue-hulled Endeavour, British challenger for the most famous of all international yacht-racing honors, not only whipped Harold S. Vanderbilt's Rainbow, the defender, for the second successive day, but broke the America's Cup record for speed over a 30-mile triangular course and satisfied all hands it will take something approaching a miracle to stop the invader from taking the "old mug" back to the land of its birth.

Two more victories in a series limited to seven races will clinch for Sopwith the cup that the old schooner America captured in 1851, and which has only once before been in danger of leaving the United States. The rivals race again today, starting at 11:40 A. M. (Eastern Daylight Saving Time).

Back in 1920 Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock IV had an even more commanding margin of two victories to none over the defender Resolute in a five-match series, but whereas that challenger was aided first by a breakdown of Resolute and then a fluke before losing three straight, Sopwith now has captured two clean-cut victories and demonstrated without the palest shadow of a foggy doubt that he has the faster boat.

Except for a few seconds at the start, Endeavour held the lead throughout in a fair breeze that measured 14 knots at the outset but eventually diminished to 9½ knots. She gave another splendid exhibition of her extraordinary speed as well as a better display of seamanship, despite an accident that ultimately led to the collapse of her big genoa jib. She piled up a comfortable margin with much the better of the going on the first 10-mile reach, as well as the ensuing windward leg, and had no difficulty standing off Rainbow's belated challenge on the closing 10-mile reach.

Rainbow picked up 40 seconds on the last 10 miles but Endeavour crossed the finish line fully 300 yards in front, with a lead of 51 seconds on time. Both sloops were under the former America's Cup record as Endeavour covered the triangular course in three hours, nine minutes, one second, while Rainbow crossed the line in 3:09:52.

It was exactly four years ago to the day, September 18, 1930, that Vanderbilt crowned his sweep over Shamrock V by winning the fourth and last race of the series in what was then the record time of 3:10:13 for a similar course.

On the way to the record, Endeavour and Rainbow also eclipsed the intermediate cup record for a 10-mile windward leg, although it wasn't a true beating under existing conditions. The challenger's time of 1:18:19 for the middle 10 miles surpassed the former mark of 1:19:58 set by the defender Reliance in 1903. Rainbow's elapsed time for the same stretch was 1:19:34.

Where the surprising British challenger came from behind the day before to outrun Rainbow and literally chase the defender off the course, Sopwith drove her into the lead yesterday. There was only a 16-second margin between the two lofty rivals as they swung around the first mark, but it was sufficient to enable the British skipper to gain and capitalize a decisive margin.

Rainbow gained slightly as they shifted sails for the last time, in addition to which the defender demonstrated ability to foot a bit faster on reach into the wind, but there was never any question of the outcome.

Both before and after yesterday's race Endeavour was saluted by the President of the United States, who witnessed his third day of the sport aboard Vincent Astor's Nourmahal. Mr. Roosevelt waved cheerily to Skipper Sopwith and his crew at close hand a few minutes before the start, and Nourmahal dipped her colors to the gallant challenger.

Vanderbilt has shown himself a master of starting tactics and his crew has performed magnificently, but the defender has not shown the speed to match the challenger in windward or leeward racing.

Notwithstanding, Vanderbilt refused to take advantage of his privilege of asking a day's postponement, arbitrarily. However, the defender was less prompt that Endeavor in signifying willingness to enter the third race today.

DENVER — (INS) — Government figures showing that Denver had the third highest automobile death rate in the nation last year led to the assigning of 16 patrolmen to solo motorcycle duty in an effort to reduce accidents. They were ordered to "clamp down" on violators of city traffic ordinances.

LONDON — (INS) — The Royal Academy of British Art, which has just closed its doors until next year, announced that the past season was one of the most successful of its historic career. Not only did the number of visitors to the exhibitions show a tremendous increase but the sale of pictures totaled more than $55,000, an increase of more than $10,000 over the preceding year's total.

HOLLYWOOD, . . . —Sandra Shaw Cooper is now one up on the Hollywood dog fanciers, who try to outdo each other in introducing new breeds. Gary's handsome wife has returned from the east with Hollywood's first French poodle—an immaculate white specimen standing several feet high, which has to have a red ribbon tied around its head to keep its fleecy hair from falling down into its eyes.

Hardly the dog to go with Gary and his pipe, but then it's not Gary's dog.

A pest on those people, few as they are, who are criticizing Eddie Cantor for weaving his family life into his personal appearance talks and radio broadcasts. The comedian and his wife, Ida, are among the most devoted couples in the show business. Cantor's references to Ida and to his five daughters, add a homey touch to his humor that gets right down to the every-day life of his listeners. And I happen to know that the comedian has received many letters on the subject—many thanking him for unconsciously patching up serious quarrels in the lives of other people.

In the picture, "Menace," you're going to see a knife hurled into Bertie Churchill's back and you're going to cry "Fake." But the scene was a lot more real than you imagine.

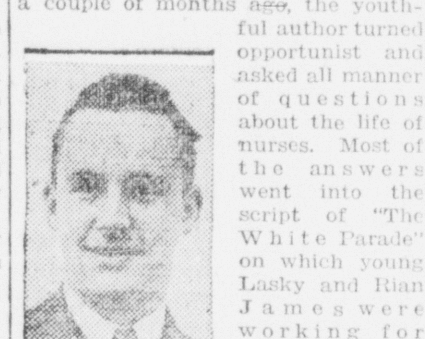

The knife actually was hurled at Churchill. An invisible piece of wood, strapped under the actor's coat, received the point, but a miscalculation of a few inches would have skewered the actor's arm. Of course, Steve Clemente, the man who threw the knife, never makes mistakes. He never has in all the time he has worked for the movies. Just to give Churchill confidence, Jay Marchand, the assistant director of the picture, put a cigaret in his mouth and let Steve clip it in two from a distance of 10 paces.

The other way to film the scene with Churchill was to photograph a rubber knife hitting through the air and then to make a quick cut to a real one quivering in his back. But then you would have missed the flash of the steel as it cut the air.

Broadway is summoning the truant Glenn Anders back home. The young actor who went to Los Angeles High school, but who won his spurs on the New York stage, is being asked to play one of the leads in the Theater Guild production of "The Sleeping Clergyman". Anders will go back if he can finish his scenes in R-K-O's "By Your Leave".

When an appendicitis operation sent Jesse Lasky, Jr. to the hospital a couple of months ago, the youthful author turned opportunist and asked all manner of questions about the life of nurses. Most of the answers went into the script of "The White Parade" on which young Lasky and Rian James were working for Jesse Lasky, Sr.

Jesse Lasky, Jr.

And now the nurse who gave the information gets a job in the movies. Helen Kennedy, on the staff of the Cedars of Lebanon hospital, has been appointed technical adviser on the picture.

What film colony wife and husband swap will soon be legally effected at last?

KNICK-KNACKS—

So a lot of you want to know how come Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., once attended the Hollywood School for Girls? Well, at one time in its existence, the school lifted the bars and accepted infants of both sexes. Doug, Jr., went there then. . . . English Actress Binnie Barnes showed Hollywood preview hounds a new trick the other evening. She had three stooges go early to the theater showing "The Merry Widow" and hold the seats until her arrival with two unidentified male companions. . . . After inspecting more than 20 places, W. C. Fields is still looking for a new house. . . . Sheldon Lewis, playing in a revival of "Hawshaw the Detective" here, is stone deaf. He gets his cues through vibrations, through watching the other actors' lips and gestures. He never misses. . . . And Herbert Mundin is taped up until two broken ribs are cured. He fell off a truck going to location.

Boston's Big Boss

By BURNLEY

THIS SPEEDY 3RD SACKER IS THE SOX' SPARK PLUG AND THE MOST IMPROVED PLAYER OF 1934.

MILLIONAIRE OWNER OF THE BOSTON RED SOX WHO SPENT A FORTUNE MAKING OVER THE LOWLY BEAN-EATERS INTO A FIRST DIVISION TEAM!

THE NEW RED SOX BROKE ALL ATTENDANCE MARKS THIS YEAR.

THOMAS YAWKEY, multi-millionaire owner of the Boston Red Sox, determined to make the lowly Bean-eaters into a first division outfit when he took over the franchise last year. So he took the rubber band off of his very substantial bankroll and proceeded to buy up all the star ball players available.

Some of his expensive purchases didn't turn out so well, and some players of whom little was expected have blossomed into stardom, but at any rate, Yawkey has made the Red Sox a first division team. He paid out a fortune for such players as Lefty Grove, Max Bishop and Wesley Ferrell, and he has already made it back with the box-office proceeds of the present campaign, in which the rejuvenated Red Sox have broken all attendance records for the Hub.

Lefty Grove, of course, has been the big disappointment of the year for Beantown fans. If the elongated fireball masher had flashed his 1933 stuff for Bucky Harris, the Red Sox would have come close to winning the American League flag this season. Yawkey has not given up hope that Grove's arm will come back, and it may be that next year Lefty will recover his old effectiveness.

Bill Werber has been the big surprise of 1934 for the Red Sox. This unheralded youngster, who was thrown in as part of the deal when the Red Sox purchased George Pipgras from the Yanks, has become one of the best third sackers in the junior circuit, ranking on a par with Pinky Higgins and Marvin Owen.
